AN AWFUL DEATH

Harry Acklam Killed by Two Ferocious Bull Dogs.

Ears Bitten Off, Scalp Torn Off and Throat Torn Away.

The Little Boy Was Gathering Flowers With a Companion When Attacked By the Dogs. The Companion Ran Away.

A Human Ear First Found and Then the Horribly Mutilated Body. How the Boy Disappeared and Was Found by the Police. The Inquest.

That a little boy could be literally torn to pieces and killed by two ferocious bull dogs, almost within a stone's throw of a large factory, is a startling and a ghastly truth. Hundreds of persons were employed and no person witness or known of the fact, seems incredible, but a boy was found murdered last night and today little Harry Acklam, No. 1637 Hamilton avenue, lies upon a bier, a pitiful and terrible sight to gaze upon. Both his ears are torn off and face horribly disfigured or close to the head, the hair and scalp torn from the head, throat punctured, ears torn out, arm torn and lacerated, eyes torn out and face horribly sliced. Besides there are marks of dog's fangs upon the body as far down as the waist.

MISSING FROM HOME.

Little Harry Acklam was a pupil at the Howell school and was in the room under the charge of Miss Cunn. Yesterday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock, he, with the rest of his class was dismissed, having finished recitations and other studies. When done, the boys came away. The boy had not arrived home but the parents thought perhaps he was dismissed, having left his work. As the hours passed, however, the parents became alarmed and reported the disappearance of the boy to neighbors and later, possibly 10, Poulson Wood was notified. At first nothing was thought of it for the reason missions were so frequent. They chased the animal away and with lanterns they commenced to search. In a very short time policeman Basinger found a human ear and the size of it indicated that it was that of a small boy. Fifteen or twenty feet farther away they found the body of the little boy and what a frightful sight it was. The clothing was stripped from the body down to the waist and the head was a mass of blood. Both ears were torn off, the nose torn off, hair and all, leaving skull bare. One eye was torn out and when it was a fearful sight; the thread was torn partly to pieces, face torn through and all over the upper part of the body were marks of dog's fangs and the appearance of the body was that the dogs had sucked the blood and dragged the body about the field for a radius of several rods, the sad inflicting such a state of affairs.

OFFICERS SHED TEARS.

As hardened as the officers were to see the terrible sights, the one before them caused tears to spring to their eyes and they said it was the most horrible thing they ever saw or heard of. The little mangled body was taken up and carried to the offices of the police, where it was conveyed to the Police Department office for medical examination. The body was then conveyed to the premises where the Boys' Home is located.

CORONER CALLED.

Coroner C. F. Nisbett had been previously called. Owing to the interest of the hour he desired it not expedient to examine a jury and it was by his order that the body was taken to morrow and this morning a coroner's inquest was held and a verdict returned as follows:

HARRY ACKLAM.

The coroner at once went to work to ascertain the name of the owner of the dog. It had been reported that they were owned by the Bell City Manufacturing company, but there is not on the record. At the offices of the company it was stated that the dogs were owned by James Godfrey, a tenant employed by the company who lives in a house adjoin- ing the plant of the company. It was further stated that the horses were between six and eight months old and not known to be vicious or ugly. People living in the neighborhood said that the dogs were kept there for the purpose of guarding the premises.
