Girl Killed by Dogs

ISHPEMING, Mich. (AP) — A 5-year-old girl was mauled to death and partially eaten by neighborhood dogs after she stepped off her school bus and walked toward home, state police say.

The body of Angie Nickerson was discovered in the snow Thursday by a woman delivering mail in the tiny, unincorporated town of National Mine, south of Ishpeming in Michigan’s Upper Peninsula, state police said.

“It appears she had been chewed upon, right down to the bone,” said Sgt. Greg Tait. “Based on what the doctor saw, he says it resembles a shark attack.”

Residents said roaming dogs always had been a problem in National Mine.

“It’s so horrible. We don’t want to believe it,” said Annie Trudell at a country store across the street from where the girl was killed. “They’re our neighborhood dogs.”

No one saw the attack but two dogs — one owned by a close relative of Nickerson — were ripping at the child’s clothing when state police officers arrived, said Sgt. Paul Numikowski at the Negaunee post.

Officers killed the dogs — a huskie and a German shepherd, he said. They still were searching for a third dog seen in the general area, Numikowski said.

The child got off the bus from her morning kindergarten class at 11:30 a.m. and was found by the mailbox up .12 at 325.07.

On Thursday the Dow industrial average climbed to 2,265.71.

Advancing issues declines by more than 973 up, 448 down, and 43 unchanged.

Big Board volume was 973 million shares, against 772 million in the previous session.

Volume reported to The Argus-Press today at 11 a.m. was 797,000 shares, with gold selling for $303 a troy ounce and silver for $4.69 a troy ounce.

outside her home two hours later, state police said.

"Nobody heard anything but dogs barking. We hear that all of the time," Trudell said.

She said she and other residents won't feel safe until police prove they have the right animals by examining their stomach contents.

"She was eaten. It could be any of them," Trudell said.

An autopsy on the animals was scheduled for today, Numikowski said.

Roaming dog packs hadn't been reported as a problem in rural Marquette County, said workers at the state police post, sheriff's department and county Humane Society.

"It doesn't do any good," Trudell said. "We had called for years. There's nobody here to enforce the dog laws."

Tilden Township doesn't have an animal control officer. Larry Snell, the animal control officer for neighboring Ishpeming Township, said he worked part-time for about two weeks last year patrolling Tilden Township.

"I heard people saying National Mine does have a problem with dogs running loose, but I just didn't have time to work that second job," Snell said.

Summary: This Michigan law bans acquisition and possession of wolf-dog hybrids, though it “grandfathered” animals already owned as pets at the time of the law’s enactments. In order to maintain public safety and animal welfare, the state created a strict permit system for those owners who were allowed to keep their already-existing pets.

Obituary - Patti Nickerson Manning

Patti Nickerson Manning, 40, was found shot to death at her home in Richmond Township, Michigan, on September 21, after her second husband Donald Manning, 44, told police he had killed her. Donald Manning was charged with murder, held without bond in the Marquette County Jail, and may face life in prison if convicted. Patti Nickerson Manning had four children with her first husband, Dale Nickerson, whom she divorced in the mid-1980s. On March 2, 1989, on a subzero day in National Mine, Michigan, her five-year-old daughter Angie got off her school bus between her own home and that of her grandparents, across the street, and was fatally mauled by a Malamute/wolf hybrid who was adopted from an animal shelter and given to her aunt Tammi Alderton by a boyfriend five days earlier. Angie's partially eaten remains were not found for more than an hour because each family thought she had gone to the home of the other. After a series of bitter lawsuits among the family members, Nickerson Manning fought for legislation to prohibit owning and breeding wolf hybrids and other dangerous pets. Michigan finally adopted the law she wanted in July 2000.

Battle Creek Enquirer
May 25, 1997

LANSING - The school bus driver noticed a dog coming down the hill as 5-year-old Angie Marie Nickerson got off the bus one March afternoon. Dogs aren't an unusual sight in the Upper Peninsula community of National Mine, and the driver didn't give it another thought. Angie headed for her house, and the bus pulled away. Somewhere during her 100 foot walk to the front door, the "dog" - actually a neighbor's wolfdog hybrid - struck. He dragged the brown-haired youngster away from the house, mauling her as he went. Then he killed her. Angie's uncle found the animal still crouched over his niece after following a trail of torn clothing a mail carrier had tacked a person in Michigan, he said that attacks by wolf hybrids make people less likely to tolerate wolves in the state, endangering the wolf recovery program. If Michigan passes the legislation, it would join the 13 states that already prohibit the ownership of wolf hybrids and the nine that regulate ownership...

Lansing State Journal

In the eight years since Angie's death, Nickerson, who now lives in Palmer, has tried to ban people from owning wolf hybrids in , Michigan. Now, a three-bill package that would ban private ownership not only of wolf hybrids but of exotic native and wild cats, bears and primates is about to be introduced. Rep. Gerald Law, a Plymouth Republican sponsoring the package, said he expects the bills to go to committee before lawmakers leave for their summer break in June or July. "It's silly to sit and do nothing and then have another person killed and say, Why didn't we do something?" he said. "It's a problem you can't ignore. It's getting worse." Owners who now have such pets could keep them, but would have to obtain an annual permit and inspection of the animals' housing and care to keep them. They also would have to have the animals sterilized and identified with tattoos or microchips. Dog trainer Cheryl Carlson, owner of Cher Car Kennels in Lansing, said the bills are well-intended but won't do what the sponsors hope. - "It's not going to stop dog attacks, and it's not going to keep children from being hurt," she said...
Woman whose daughter’s death fueled anti-wolf-dog fight killed

MARQUETTE, Mich. (AP) — A woman who became an anti-wolf-dog activist after her 5-year-old daughter’s mauling death has been shot to death.

In part because of the activism of Patti Nickerson Manning and others, the Legislature approved a ban on sales of the breed, effective in July.

On Saturday, police found the 40-year-old Manning dead in her home in Marquette County’s Richmond Township. They arrested her 44-year-old husband. He was being held without bond in the Marquette County Jail while awaiting arraignment.

State police Sgt. Joseph O’Hagan from the Negawnee post said Sunday that the husband had been charged but he did not know the exact charges.

Marquette County Central Dispatch received a 911 call about 5:30 a.m. from a man who said his wife had been shot.

“He said he fatally shot his wife,” O’Hagan told The Mining Journal of Marquette.

Troopers and police from the Forsyth Township and Negawnee police departments found Angie was attacked and killed March 2, 1989 by an animal she said was a wolf-dog hybrid. She was consulted by the Legislature in the development of a law that bans Michigan residents from buying wolf-dog hybrids.

The law requires permits and strict handling guidelines for those who already have hybrids.

Supporters of the new law say at least five Michigan children have been killed by wolf-dog hybrids in the past 19 years.
Robert Carter of Kenton, Michigan. Her children are Barbara (John) Kushwara, Scott Carter, Mark Carter, and Linda (Peter) Lassing. Grandchildren are Heather, Shannon, Jason, Chad, Brian, Kyle, Ashley, and Larissa. She was preceded in death by one grandson, Clint.

Helen was a retired employee of Milwaukee County General Hospital who moved to Kenton with her husband Robert in 1985. She was an active member of the Order of the Eastern Star and she was a charter member of the Sunset Circle in Iron River. Helen was past First Lady and secretary of the Northern Michigan unit of the Airstream Travel Group. Helen was born on June 2, 1923 in Mikana, Wisconsin, daughter of Henry and Martha Ertel.

She spent her last years in her home on the Stoney Creek in Kenton, surrounded by her family and friends, while traveling with her husband to Florida in the wintertime. A memorial service will be held Wednesday, September 27, 2:00 pm, at Wandersee Funeral Home in Bruce Crossing, Michigan. The family requests that donations be made in lieu of flowers to the Shriner's Children's Hospitals, in care of the Marquette Ahmed Temple.
